Colonel R. B. Rhett formerly of the Charleston Mercury met Judge Cooley of New Orleans near Montgomery Station, in a duel, and the latter was killed after the second fire. The weapons used were double barrel shot guns, distance forty yards. Col. Rhett was accompanied by his friends Dr. J. Dickson Bruns, and Mr. Charles Roman. The duel grew out of a libel suit against Col. Rhett's paper, the "Picayune," in which Judge Cooley was counsel.

At Virginia City, Nevada, ten persons were killed and many wounded by an explosion of Nitro Glycerine.

MISS ALBERGOTTES ACADEMY. Was closed for vacation on last Wednesday the 25th, and will remain closed during the Summer months, affording that mental and bodily recreation so much needed both to teacher and scholar. The career of this popular and established school has been a success since its opening, and each session adds to the roll of its scholars. The faithfulness and thoroughness of the mode of instruction imparted, and the special care manifested for the moral training of the children placed under the charge of the principal, affords advantages which are seldom to be had in similar institutions. The incentive which 'impels every effort of the child and moves it to success, is a desire to please its teacher, this acts as a charm over all the scholars, and a generous rivalry animates the entire class room. The exercises of examination showed a proficency and degree of study, that rewarded both child and preceptress, and covered fully the capacity of the examinees. Upon the conclusion of the examination and review of studies, there was a charming treat of recitation from several of of the scholars. Master E. Glover led off with a happy little speech, "Vacation." Misses Mary and Ella Bull, and Misses Belle DeTreville and Carrie Izlar, formed a quartette of bright descanters on "The Birds." The "evengelical dialogue" by Misses Ada DeTreville and Fanny Jenney was rendered in a felicitous style. Miss Minnie Edwards seemed to appreciate the fervor of thought which glowed in the author of the "Two Cities," in her recitation of that beautiful piece. Miss Julia Jenney's rendering of the "Sacrilgeous Gamesters" was an achievment of study and taste.-Miss Fanny Jenney's "Editor," would have repaid the attention of the crowd, who think the tripod a bed of reseate ease; "Look Aloft," by Miss Abbe Hutson, "Life," by Miss Emily Scoville, light. Their temperament is highly and the "Miser" by Miss Lena Jeffords, courageous, no peril prevents their de-were all beautifully delivered. "Que- predations, no danger deters them-and Queen," by Miss Georgie Norris, "Confound Arithmetic," by Miss Mary Bull, "The School Room," by Miss Lucy Danner, "The Little Family," by Miss Otis Whitmore, "Adieu," by Miss Lizzie ·Buil, "Sorrow and Joy," by Miss Clara Wiles, and "Morning and Noon," by Miss Neta Sifley, were pieces all rendered in a tasteful and creditable style. Master Charles Danner told of the "Thoughtless Young Man," and Master Theodore Jeffords actually was radiant in his "Close of Term," and full of hopes of bright holiday. After five months of hard study, and close application, both of scholars and teacher, the list of prizes was read, and awarded.

1st prize Miss Lena Jeffords. 2d prize Miss Ada DeTreville. 3d prize Miss Julia Jenney.

A Tie was made between Misses Lizzie Bull and Fanny Jenney, for the 4th

In the primary department the prize was won by Muster Theodore Jeffords. Owing to sickness, and not entering until several weeks after the session had commenced Misses Edwards and Rickenbacker did not compete for prizes. The morale and tone of the school is of the highest order, and reflects credit upon the

MR. EDITOR:-What must we do when our papers and letters cannot be received from the office where they are sent? I did not get your ever welcome TIMES last week, and the same with the S. C. Advocate, which never fails, unless something is wrong in the P.O. I also had a very important letter put in the office at Orangeburg on 21st which has not reached me yet. Now Mr. Editor, if your paper had been the only one missing I should have blamed you, but when there are so many missing at one time the P. M. must be at fault, and that P. M. is at Fort Motte. Can you please call his attention to the fact, and perhaps it may be of some good to our community.

[We received the above, and publish it that the Fort Motte, P. M. may have his say so. It is no small matter to have letters and papers missent or held back and every care should be observed in giving people the benefits intended by a

[FROM OUR CHARLESTON CORRESPONDENT.] Charleston Letter.

Charleston, July 2, 1873. "Blessed be the man who invented sleep, said "Sancho Panza," and in the same spirit, we are inclined to say,blessed be the man who invented ice, and all manner of cold contrivance," calculated to cool and refresh scorching humanity, during the long hot sultry days of summer, and the close damp nights-when every day appears as hot as it can possibly be, and we only realize how much hotter it can become, by comparing to-day with the day preceedingand when the song of the mosquito "is heard in the land." It is a fearful subject for contemplation, that this savage little creature lives entirely on man, and draws its subsistence from our most vital principle-and it is mortifying to chron icle, that only the "fair sex" of the mosquito race, (Les dams mos) pursue this murderous employment-but facts are stubborn things, and naturalists assure us that this is the case. The origin of the insect like that of a higher class of a "dusky color," is involved in the deepest mystery, whether they are aboriginees of our coast, or whether imported in the clothes or trunks of the early settlerswe have not been able to ascertain. It is however very evident, that the air and climate agree wonderfully well with them and they evince no disposition to emigrate, but are seemingly well content to abide in the land where their forefathers flourished. To "be fruitful and multiply," is a command they admirably illustrate-the number of births in their family always being greatly in excess of the deaths. Their appetite is insatiate, and their behavior while feeding denotes exquisite enjoyment-plunging their pro

bosis or siphon deep into the skin of the unhappy victim, the hind legs more in kicks of perfect satisfaction, and the whole body quivers in an cestacy of deries," by Miss Bessie Glover. "The May their triumphant strains are heard, as the object of their attack engages in fruitless efforts for their extermination. Not the least interesting of the very few sights to be seen about our city; is the "diving apparatus," now used in the harbor by Professor Maillefert, for the recovery of iron, and other valuable stuff from the wrecks of beats sunk, mostly during the war; portions of the Hoosatonic," the "Keokuk," and the Confederate gunboats, have already been obtained, the Professor possesses a diver among his employees who almost rivals "Nicolo Pesce," in boldness and intrepidity, for a coscume; he wears a suit of rubber, fitting very close, and perfectly watertight, covering his head and a part of the shoulders, is a kind of metal helmet, having in front a piece of glass through which to see, tubes attached to this contrivance supply the driver wifer air, and large leaden weights are attached to different portions of his person; arrayed in this fashion the diver can work a very long time under the water. Some time since, a shark of the largest kind was seen playing around the boat from which our diver launches-down how ever he went as unconcernedly, as if the fish had been in the middle of the Atlantic ocean. On coming up he was asked whether he had seen the fish, "No," was the reply, "but I felt him, as he of that day, must be anticipated.

Depositors are requested to hand in their books to be written up, and interest credited on havior he was very hungry." . It would appear that the shark, who is a veritable coward among fishes, although the most blood-thirsty, is frightened by the strange dress of the diver, and fails to recognize the "nice morsel" when 'put up in a covering of rubber and metal.

> Having spoken of "Nicolo Pesce," it may be not uninteresting, to give a short account of this very remarkable personage. He lived in the times of Frederick King of Sicily, and was from his amazing powers in swimming, surnamed "the fish;" from his infancy he had supported himself by the oysters and coral, which he dove for, and then sold to the villagers on the coast. He was frequently known to spend five days at a time in the midst of the waves, living on the fish which he caught, (this we consider as fishy.) He often swam over from Sicily into Calabria, carrying the letters of the King, (there were no postal cards cards in those days). Some mariners, once out at sea, observed what they took to be a "Sea Monster," but on drawing near it the track the weather the sea was very high, and the weather tempestuous but "Nicola" was carrying correspondence as usual, and showed the sailors the waterproof bag containing his mail. This wonderful personage however possessed a great anyantage over ordinary swimmers, the spaces between his fingers and toes being webbed like a goose, and his chest was so spacious, that one inhallation, would serve him the entire day. For a man of such rare powers -his end excites our pity-at the suggestion of the King. he dove down to discover if possible, what was at the bottom of the gulf of Charybdis, being further induced by a gold cap the monarch had ordered to be flung in, Nicholas was successful and brought up the cup, but in a second attempt, in search of another cup and purse, neither Nicholas, or the articles were ever heard of again, and he perished; if not in the service of his country, at least in that of his King.

Our Postal Card arrangements commenced on the 1st. If any any set of men deserve the compassion of their race, on account of the trying nature of their duties, we commend to the public sympathy the mail carryers. The patience exhibited by Job, was trifling in comparison to what these gentlemen will be called on to display; we suppose, at least one fifth of the houses here have neither bells or knockers-at these the post-man will be obliged to try various little devices to make himself heard-and when there are bells or knockers, the usual delay of our servants will cause him, if he is pious, to assume a martyr like expression, and if otherwise, to rent his feelings in some of those strong expressions for which the English language is so celebrated.
